

PADDINGTON STREET GARDENS AND PLAYGROUND

April 9, 2010

The playground in Paddington Street Gardens is one of my favourite in Central London. I love that it's tucked away off the beaten path in Marylebone, slightly hidden unless you know it's there. It means that it never usually gets too crowded, and you get the sense that all the kids there are from the neighbourhood. The playground has been recently renovated so all the equipment is new and the grounds are well looked after. In redesigning the playground they did a good job of catering to both babies and bigger kids as they have a variety of toys to play on. Plus, I love when playgrounds are covered in that rubbery flooring - it's nice for babies to crawl around on, and means safer falling for the older ones. Not to mention... it's located just off my favourite street in London - Marylebone High Street. So it's a great spot to take a break/have lunch/let the kids run around whilst visiting the many great shops on the high street. Just turn off Marylebone High Street onto Moxon street and walk to the end (or you can access the gardens from Paddington Street.) For more details, click here.

Category: Central London, Play, Where

COURTNEY | NO COMMENTS
